Redirecting Behavior is a proactive teaching strategy that a teacher can use to anticipate a child's challenging behavior and try to prevent it before it continues or escalates into a problem.

BENEFITS OF REDIRECTING

- Minimizes attention to challenging behavior
- Maximizes learning
- Provides a clear description of the behavior expected from the child
- Provides positive attention or access to desired material or activity as soon as the child is again engaged in appropriate behavior.

TYPES OF REDIRECTING

Physical

Physical redirecting prevents a child from misbehaving and directs to another activity.

Verbal

Verbal redirecting distracts the child and directs to another activity.

Cue

Redirecting with a cue prompts a child to use an appropriate skill.

Proximal attention

Redirecting with proximal attention focuses on a positive model in the child's proximity (e.g., a nearby child who is engaged in a more appropriate behavior).
